

NOTES ON EDUCATION.

The city authorities of Baltimore have appropriated some money for the creation and maintenance of a manual training school.

Public education in Greece is sadly limited, and there is a discouraging amount of illiteracy. The private schools are flourishing.

Those teachers and students who do not care to take a systematic course of instruction are allowed by the rules of the Correspondence University to receive occasional assistance on points of special difficulty. Application is made to Secretary Wait, of Ithaca, and a fee proportionate to the importance of the service is charged.

From the first, the most able professors of Harvard have given every aid to the Annex by cordial interest, by wise counsel and by personal instruction. Professor Peirce says: "The courses most frequent are those of the most serious character.

Among my pupils I have found some of marked excellence, and all have given evidence of ability and serious purpose." Professor Byerly adds: "The average has been invariably higher in my Annex classes than in my college classes." Professor White says: "I have met, uniformly, great earnestness and ability of a high order." Professor Lam writes: "I sincerely hope the Annex will be sustained in every possible way. Every one of these young women is a missionary; in training one you may be training hundreds." Some of the Annex students are training from love of study, and the desire of making the most of themselves; many are teachers taking special advanced work, or young women fitting for the teacher's life. Among the former students of the Annex are several teachers of classics and mathematics in schools of New England, two principals of classical schools in Kansas and Montana, a professor of music at Carleton College, Minnesota, and teachers of Greek at Vassar and Wellesley College.

The Annex is not a rival of any woman's college; it fills a different plan: situated in a university town, and possessing the privileges of the great Harvard library, the Annex offers the Harvard course, each of whom has given his life to a particular branch of learning, the Annex offers advantages beyond those of any woman's college. With an endowment fund of $100,000 the Annex may have an official connection with Harvard University, and its financial beginning will have an annual contribution of $70,000 has already been raised, $30,000 more must be raised, and an additional $50,000 would build a hall for class rooms, library and laboratory, and a modest dormitory.

The Student believes that there ought to be a doctor in every institution of importance, to superintend the health and physical training of the pupils.

Six colleges, all denominational, are in process of establishment in Dakota.

There will be opened at Fremont, Neb., next autumn, a normal school and business college.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology has now 433 students in the school of industrial science, and 114 in the school of mechanical arts and the Lowell school of practical design. Of the value of the Institute's training, President Walker says: "Here is a case in point: The president of one of the great lines of transportation in this country—a man with a genius for organization and execution—said to me but a short time ago, that he could take a young man of good sense, good judgment and good habits, a graduate from our course in civil or mechanical engineering, and, by passing him through the successive grades of responsibility in railroad management, could in five years make him a better general supervisor than could be made of a man having this preparation in twenty years. The day of half-trained men is past in this country, in all occupations—or is rapidly going past."

Denver, it is reported, is to have another college. The Presbyterian Church is to establish it, and it will at the same time found a number of normal schools in various towns of the frontier country. Leadville is already carrying on a free institute modelled upon the Cooper Institute of this city.

The studies at the Amherst Agricultural College are now arranged in two general courses, the Scientific and Agricultural, and the Scientific and Literary. While developing the practical and technical work of the institution an effort will be made to strengthen the literary departments also.

A Japanese student has been appointed assistant to the Professor of Anatomy at Berlin.
